Earn a Knowledge Panel for an Actor, Artist or Film Without a Publicist

From Ethan Felizzari-Castillo, CK Productions · Unscripted SEO, recorded January 2025

Objective

Build a creative entity (an actor, recording artist, director or film) that Google can tell apart from everyone with the same name, backed by enough third-party coverage and a clean IMDb record that a knowledge panel can form. For a company, use the business knowledge panel SOP instead.

Key Steps

1. Search the name before you pitch anyone. Record what Google shows today. For a film, search the title, then the title plus "film." Note anyone else who shares the name.
2. Sort what you have from what you need to boost. List credits, streaming titles, follower counts and existing press.
3. Keep a running outlet list, every size. Save every blog, podcast and news account you find on Instagram, 100 followers or a million.
4. Pitch the smallest outlets first, and early. Build those relationships before launch. For a film, before the shoot.
5. Get about ten articles per release. Email writers directly for every song, role or trailer. Ask for interviews where the person speaks.
6. Make every mention say the same thing. Same name spelling, same art form, same one-line description everywhere. (inferred)
7. Clean up IMDb and the profiles you control. Organize credits, add a photo, add images and content. Verify social accounts.
8. Fix the wrong person when Google merges you. Open help tickets, use the panel's feedback link, claim the panel once you can (inferred), and keep publishing coverage that names the right person.

Cautionary Notes

- Big trades want big names. Don't open with them.
- A shared name is the biggest risk. Plan disambiguation from day one; test a film title before it locks.
- Help tickets sometimes work and sometimes don't.
- No timeline was given on tape. Don't promise a date.
- One team's experience, not a measured rule.

Tips for Efficiency

- Reuse the outlet list across every project.
- Land the ten-article push in release week. (inferred)
- Recheck the name search after each release and log what moved. (inferred)
- After the panel appears, watch other databases pick the person up.

In his words

"Keep getting more people talking about it and keep populating more images and content with that same exact thing that you want to be recognized for, because that's what's worked." - Ethan Felizzari-Castillo
